

Retirement Plan Information: Loans and Hardship Withdrawals

Always Designing

Your 401(k) retirement plan is designed to help you save to achieve future financial security.

Although borrowing or withdrawing money from this savings could jeopardize your plans for retirement, you can access your savings if you need to. Before taking a loan or a hardship withdrawal from your 401(k), you may want to explore other options such as your emergency savings, a lending institution, or other source.

It is important to carefully consider whether using this money for current expenses is the right choice. Be sure you understand the tax and other financial consequences before making your decision.

Taking a retirement plan distribution may mean you will need to save more, work longer or adjust your lifestyle in retirement.

Borrowing from your 401(k)

Before taking a loan from your retirement account, be sure you understand how the feature works:

- You are responsible for paying the loan amount plus interest back to your account.
- There may be a fee for taking a loan.
- You will not owe taxes when you borrow from your 401(k). But, over time you will be taxed twice on the loan amount. Here's how: when you repay your loan, you will use after-tax money. Then, when you retire and begin withdrawing money from your account, taxes will apply to your withdrawals — including the loan payments you made.
- If you have an outstanding retirement plan loan and leave your company, you will be required to repay the loan either when you leave or shortly thereafter — often 30 to 180 days from your last day of service or last loan payment. If you are unable to repay the loan, the unpaid loan amounts will be treated as a distribution. This means, in addition to a reduced account balance in the amount of the unpaid portion, you will owe income tax on the unpaid loan, and a 10% early withdrawal penalty may also apply.
- If you have an outstanding loan and leave your company, you will be required to repay the outstanding loan amount to your retirement plan account. If you do not repay the outstanding loan amount, you will be required to claim the outstanding loan amount as ordinary income. If the withdrawal was made prior to age 59½, you could also be charged a 10% early withdrawal penalty.

You can find out more details about your plan's loan provisions on your plan's Participant Website.

You may not want to take a loan from your retirement savings if:

- Repaying the loan means you won't be able to continue saving for your future.
- Your employer offers a matching contribution. If you stop your 401(k) contribution, you may not be eligible to receive these matching contributions.
- You are nearing retirement.
- You are planning to change jobs in the near future or there is the possibility you could lose your job due to a company restructuring.
- You need the loan for everyday living expenses, a luxury item, or another non-necessity.
- You can get the funds you need from another source.

HOW TO REQUEST A LOAN

If you decide to borrow from your retirement savings, you can submit your request via the ADP Mobile App, or on your plan's Participant Website.

HOW TO REQUEST A HARDSHIP WITHDRAWAL

If you decide a hardship withdrawal is right for you, you can submit and certify your request via the ADP Mobile App, or on your plan's Participant Website. As you complete the online process, you may be prompted to provide supporting details to qualify the withdrawal request.

Fast access to your 401(k) savings for a financial hardship

A financial emergency may require you to use the money you have saved for your future. This type of withdrawal, called a hardship withdrawal, is a distribution from your 401(k) that can be made under the condition of an immediate and heavy financial need.

The IRS requires that the money must be used for one of the following reasons, and you must provide supporting details about the hardship for it to qualify:

- Medical expenses
- Costs related to the purchase of a primary residence
- Education tuition, fees and expenses
- Foreclosure or eviction
- Funeral expenses
- Expenses related to the repair of damage to your principal residence
- Expenses and losses (including loss of income) due to a federally declared disaster

A hardship withdrawal is a distribution, not a loan, and you do not have to repay it. To qualify for a hardship withdrawal, the IRS will require proof of financial hardship through supporting details.

Taking a hardship distribution could be costly. Regular income taxes will apply to the withdrawal, and you may also be required to pay an 10% early withdrawal penalty tax if you are younger than age 59 ½. However, if you meet one of the following exceptions, this penalty may be waived:

- Disability
- Medical debt that exceeds 7.5 percent of your adjusted gross income (AGI)
- A court order that requires you give the money to your divorced spouse, a child, or a dependent
